Super-Super-Secret: When Gen. Mark Clark was picked to head a special Hoover commission task force investigating the central intelligence agency, everybody figured he would get a look at even the most secret operations of the hush-hush spying agency. When he made his report, Herbert Hoover didn't even look at the secret part—he delivered it sealed into the hand of President Eisenhower himself. Now, however, it develops that there are some operations so secret that even Clark didn't get to look them over. Only two men know about some of these—the agent in charge of a program and Allen Dulles, who is the only man in the outfit who knows everything it's doing.
